Missionary Archives on Asia

For some years now IDC has been engaged in the microfilming of major missionary society archives. The importance of these documents as a primary resource continues to grow as their value for the study of a variety of scholarly disciplines and subjects becomes ever more widely recognized. IDC has now very usefully arranged the microfiches of several missionary archives according to area and subject specifications. The broad range of subjects listed in this catalogue includes famine; the issue of extraterritoriality in China; education and political reform in India; Sino-Japanese relations; the internment of missionaries in wartime and the expulsion of missionaries from China after the Communist takeover.

The wealth of data described and indexed in this catalogue chiefly comprises letters, journals and reports sent by Protestant missionaries in the mission fields of East, South and South-East Asia to their respective home bases. Of the missionary organizations represented here, the oldest is the London Missionary Society, founded in 1795, whose pioneer missionary in China, Robert Morrison, arrived at Canton (Guangzhou) in 1807. The London Missionary Society, renamed and restructured as the Council for World Mission in 1977, developed its major mission stations in Amoy (Xiamen), Hong Kong, Shanghai and, after 1860, in Hankow, (Hankou), Peking (Beijing) and Tientsin (Tianjin), with further stations in surrounding districts. In India the Society's most successful area of activity lays in the South, among the Tamil, Telegu, and Kanarese-speaking people of present-day Kerala, Tamil Nadu and Mysore. The Methodist Missionary Society archive primarily records the activities of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society, Thomas Coke leading the first mission to India and Ceylon (Sri Lanka) in 1813. There is also a separate section on Women's Work. The WMMS established mission stations at major centres throughout India, as well as Burma and Sri Lanka. The Society began work in China in the 1850s, concentrating its efforts particularly in the city of Canton (Guangzhou) and the provinces of Hupeh (Hubei), Hunan, Kwangtung (Guangdong) and Kiangsi (Jiangxi).

The Presbyterian Church of England's Foreign Missions' Committee sent its first missionary, William Chalmers Burns, to China in 1847. The Society worked in South Fujian, East Guangdong and Formosa (Taiwan), and also had mission stations in Singapore, Malaysia and Rajshahi, East Bengal (Bangladesh). The records of its Women's Missionary Association are also included here. The archive of the United Society for Christian Literature incorporates the records of the Religious Tract Society, founded in 1799, the Christian Literature Society for India, founded in 1858, and the Christian Literature Society for China. The main aim of these societies was to disseminate the Christian message in vernacular languages by means of tracts and other publications, sometimes using missionaries and sometimes their own agents.

Two of the organizations represented here, the Conference of British Missionary Societies, founded in 1912, and the International Missionary Council, which dates back to 1910, were concerned with national and international missionary operations during the critical years of the early and mid twentieth century. Their archives comprise committee, council and conference minutes and proceedings, study reports, and other papers on education, indigenous church development; inter-faith relations, medical work, religious liberty and other economic, political and social issues.
